

Little Willie's New Bike

Scares the stuffing out of everybody in the neighborhood. That's where Willie's Bike is different from our prices—they are so reasonable they wouldn't scare anybody.

Seriously, neighbors, if you want a few boards for fixing up about the place, or a regular bill of material for a nice new house, we are in position to name you the lowest prices going. As for our lumber, there is no better to be had at any price.

TAPPED THE TILL.

SNEAK THIEF IN ST. PAUL DEPOT

Unknown Party Succeeds in Getting Away with $26 White Employees Are Out to Supper.

On Thursday evening, between six and seven o'clock, some party, whose identity is unknown, entered the St. Paul depot while the employees were at supper and breaking open the till, took all the money contained therein, amounting to $26.

The last man in the depot that afternoon was Tim Reilly, and he left for supper about 6:20 and returned about 7:00 o'clock. When Mr. Reilly got back to the depot the baggage man had arrived just a few minutes before and they discovered that the till had been opened and the contents removed.

None of the locks or fastenings on the doors had been disturbed, with the exception of one door that is usually locked on the inside which was found to be unhooked.

It is supposed that the person who did the work had hidden himself in the freight room sometime during the day, probably when the passenger train came in about 5:30. There he had remained in concealment until all the employees had gone to supper, when he merely had to walk from the freight house into the baggage room, and then into the depot proper and help himself.

It is thought that the man had expected to find more in the till than he did, and there are times when he might have done so, but no large amount is ever allowed to accumulate in the till.

The officers have been looking for anybody of a suspicious nature, but as nobody saw the man, nor saw anybody hanging about whom they suspect, there is not much chance of finding the guilty party.

Besides the above there were 5 sweepstake events which were for one dollar entrance fee and a division of the money. In these events our men came out with their share of the spoils. The last event was one of five doubles and Will Scott carried off the honors by getting 10 straight. A return match between Wausau and Grand Rapids will be held in this city on the fourth of July.

The members are high in their praise of the manner in which they were treated by the Wausau team, both collectively and individually and are anxious to return the compliment.

To Get Rid of Ants.

Wausau Pilot: In response to a letter from Assemblyman W. P. Collins of this city asking how to get rid of ants in lawns, which are very troublesome here this year, E. S. Goff of the state experiment station at Madison makes the following reply:

"The best way I know of to destroy ants in a lawn is to pour a little carbon bisulphate into the hill and then cover with a piece of wet cloth to prevent the escape of fumes. I apply it by making a hole an inch or two deep in the center of the ant hill and pouring in about two tablespoonsful of carbon bisulphate. This material can be purchased at the drug store. The fumes of it are heavier than air and so tend to settle into the soil permeating in all directions and destroying all animal life. Care should be taken not to inhale the fumes and no fire should exist in the vicinity as the fumes are explosive. Ant hills on lawns seem to be unusually numerous this season.—E. S. Goff, Experiment Station, Madison, Wisconsin.

Before a Referee.

F. B. Lamoreux and B. B. Park will go to Grand Rapids, tomorrow, where they will represent the plaintiffs, L. Dessert and Frank Reynolds, of Mosinee, against the Wausau Excelsior Co. It will be argued before Herman Whippnerman, as referee, the defendants being represented by Bump, Kreutzer & Rosenberry, of Wausau, and Herman Frank, of Chicago.—Stevens Point Gazette.

PROGRAM COMPLETE

EVENTS ALL FILLED FOR THE 4TH

Promises to be an Entertaining Celebration.—Other Items of Interest About the City.

The entertainment committee for the Fourth of July has about completed the arrangements for the events, and the only thing to hope for is nice weather and there will undoubtedly be one of the biggest celebrations ever seen in this city. The program as outlined for the day is about as follows:

Parade at 10 o'clock a. m. This will form on the west side near the Northwestern depot and march across the river and back. Merchants are requested to turn out, wherever possible, and get into line with some sort of a decorated rig, and be on the ground so as to start promptly at 10 o'clock.

Speech by the Hon. Neal Brown of Wausau at 10:45.

Exhibition drill by Company A, W. N. G., at 11:15.

Wrestling match by the Beell brothers of Marshfield at 11:45.

Gun club shoot between Wausau and Grand Rapids at 1 o'clock p. m. and continuing during afternoon.

1:30 p. m. 75-yard dash, 50-yard dash, 100-yard dash, 75-yard high hurdle, running high jump, running broad jump, shot put.

2:00 o'clock. Tug of war between fire companies, rope climbing.

3:00 o'clock. Ball game. Running horse race, one-half mile bicycle race, one mile bicycle race.

7:00 o'clock. Exhibition drill and band concert, river races, log rolling contest.

7:30 o'clock. High dive.

9:00. Dancing.

Merchants and private parties are requested to do all that is possible to decorate their stores and houses and give the city a gala dress for the occasion. The committee would also like to see private carriages in the parade with floral or other decorations.

Adjudged Insane.

Mrs. Gina Kautson was examined before Judge Conway on Wednesday to determine the condition of her mind and she was adjudged insane and taken to Oshkosh the same day. The woman had been rational until Sunday last, when she was afflicted with an idea that persons in the back yard were shooting at her and the children, and when her husband came home he found she had the children gathered about her in the house and was afraid to let them go out. There does not seem to be any particular subject along which her mental bias runs, and physicians think that with proper treatment, she will soon be able to return home restored in health. Mr. Kautson is a section boss on the Green Bay road.

Si Perkins.—Our people have one thing to be thankful for and that is that they do not often have to spend an evening listening to such an aggregation of dead ones as held forth at the opera house on Thursday evening. If the members of the Si Perkins troupe would go home, take up some employment suited to their capabilities, such as sawing wood, or other work not requiring a strictly artistic temperament, they would confer a favor on mankind in general, and probably eventually become respected citizens in the community in which they live.

New Law Firm.—A new law firm has been established in this city during the past week by the association of D. D. Conway and John Jeffrey, to be known under the name of Conway & Jeffrey. Everybody in this section knows Mr. Conway and his ability, and while Mr. Jeffrey is but a recent graduate from Madison university, he is highly spoken of by his classmates as a capable young man, and the Tribune predicts a brilliant future for the new firm.

A Merited Advance.—John Anderson, who has been conductor on the run between this city and Marshfield since the road was built, has been advanced to the position of roadmaster by the Central company. John has been a faithful employee and is well qualified for the position and his many friends will be glad to hear of the recognition of his merit. He assumes his new duties on the first of July.

Bought a Parsonage.—The members of the Congregational society this week purchased the W. H. Falk property on the west side, same to be used as a parsonage. The consideration was $2,100. It was necessary to vacate the property on the east side, owing to it having been sold for residence purposes. The new parsonage is located on Cranberry street, west of the St. Paul depot.

Railway Improvements.—Two crews of men began work on the Wisconsin Central on Monday morning. They will raise the track somewhat and ballast it throughout and put it in as perfect condition as possible. The officials of the company state that when this work is completed the piece of road between Marshfield and Nekoosa will be one of the best on the whole system.

Went to the Circus.—There were about seventy-five tickets sold over the Green Bay & Western on Wednesday to parties who went to Stevens Point to take in the circus. Many who had figured on going were deterred by the rain that morning, so that the number would undoubtedly have aggregated one hundred had the weather been fine.

Sidewalks Needed.—Many of our citizens plod their weary way home over bare ground nowadays, owing to the fact that many of the sidewalks have been condemned by the street commissioner and torn up. This action was found necessary on account of the city having to pay damages to persons who have been hurt by defective walks.

A Silver Wedding.—On Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Franz Noworatzky celebrated their silver wedding, that being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. A number of the guests were from out of town, there being about forty in attendance. Mr. and Mrs. Noworatzky received many handsome and useful presents.

Got Forty Days.—Officer A. F. Gerwing came down from Marshfield on Thursday, having in custody Dave McQuaid, who had been sentenced to thirty days in the county jail for stealing a watch from a saloon keeper up there. McQuaid is one of the surfacing crew that works for the Northwestern road at Marshfield.

A Cold June.—People in this section have experienced a succession of cool weather the past month that at times has been anything but agreeable. Parties who were so rash as to remove their heating stoves at the usual time have had ample cause for regret, as a fire is almost a necessity every day.

Touched by Frost.—This section was visited by frosts Saturday and Sunday nights, and although not very severe some of the farmers from surrounding towns report that their corn was injured somewhat, although it is not thought seriously. Cranberry men do not report any damage to their crop.

Popular Excursions.—Every Sunday a number of people take advantage of the excursion rates between this city and Green Bay, about twenty-five going over last Sunday. Besides these a large number are picked up along the road so that when Green Bay is reached the train is pretty well loaded.

Hall-Withers.—Jos. M. Hall and Miss Tena Withers were married in this city on Saturday last, Justice W. H. Getts officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Hall expect to make their home in this city.

Started a Bank.—The Messrs. Arpin have established a bank at Bruce with a capital of $55,000. A brick building will be erected for the accommodation of the institution. A. L. Arpin will be cashier.

Epworth Leaguers Here.

The first of the delegates to the Epworth League convention to be held in this city arrived in the city Friday morning, and every train has brought additions to the party.

The city has been decorated with red and white bunting and there is every prospect of a most successful convention. There will be almost continuous sessions of the members after the league convenes.

MARRIED BUT NOT MATED

By "RITA."

"Very," said Beryl, with a faint smile. "Rather improbable, though. Who could have opened the spring and shot the priest down the trap door if the secret staircase was unknown?"

"The ghost, of course," said Madge. "Don't you see the sublime justice of the affair? The priest came up the stair to kill the ghost—by the way, she wasn't a ghost till afterward, but that's a mere detail—the ghost comes up the stairs and kills the priest."

"The corridor is not haunted now, I suppose?" said Beryl.

"Oh, yes. The good prior still takes his 'walks abroad,' in and out of season, and always in that same corridor."

Beryl's lip curled with faint contempt. "Has anyone professed to see it?"

"I do most solemnly assure you, Beryl, that I actually did see it once."

"My dear child!" exclaimed her friend, "don't try and impose on me any further."

"It's not imposing on you," said Madge, gravely. "It was some years ago now. In fact—why should I mind saying it?—it was when you were staying here at Christmas, and—and Ivor Grant. You know what a number of people were here? And one night I was looking at some rooms with the housekeeper that I wanted arranged for some coming guests. I had never heard this ghost story then, and was going along the corridor quite unconcernedly, when I saw before me a tall figure in an old sort of black robe. I wondered who it was, and called out. At the sound of my voice it turned, and I caught a glimpse of a pale face and glittering eyes under the shrouding cowl. I can't tell you for a moment what a horrible feeling it gave me. I stood quite still, I was so frightened, and then, quite suddenly, it seemed to melt away, and there was nothing."

"Fancy!" said Beryl, laconically.

"Fancy, indeed!" said her friend, with an indignant glance. "It was nothing of the sort; and nothing would induce me to go through that corridor at night—nothing in the world."

"Wouldn't you come with me?" asked Beryl, smiling. "I really feel very much inclined to brave the ghost."

"I hope you won't," said her friend, energetically. "It's all very well to make fun of ghosts and supernatural things, but I'm sure there's something in them for all that."

"Air," remarked Beryl, concisely.

"Skeptical, beware! Perhaps you'll say there's no such thing as magnetism or clairvoyance, or feelings that come by inspiration, like antipathy—instincts that warn us of something to be avoided, and which, if disregarded, invariably lead to harm. Did you never feel such an antipathy?"

"Yes," said Beryl in a low voice, "once."

"And who was it gave you the feeling?"

"Count Savona."

"Ah," said Madge, quietly. "You see my theory is right. You have seen very little of that man, yet you felt he was repugnant to you, and he has worked all the harm of your life. I do wonder what has become of him," she added abruptly. "I would give anything to know."

"We are leaving the field of mysticism," said Beryl. "After all the Count has done as much harm as lies in his power. Why did you bring him up, Madge? It always makes me feel uneasy."

"Well, let us drop the subject," said Madge, rising with a laugh, and pushing back her low chair in order to stand beside her friend. "It is about time for me to dress. You might come down to dinner for once," she added, "and help me entertain the county fogies."

Beryl shook her head.

"Don't ask me to break my rule, dear. Besides, I am much happier here. I can always work best at night."

Madge was silent for a moment. A step sounded outside in the corridor, and she was listening to it, wondering whether Col. Dunbar was coming for her, as he often did. A knock, and then the door opened, and she saw her husband standing there with the post bag in his hand, his usually bright face clouded and troubled.

"Letters?" she said, and stretched out her hands lazily.

He gave them to her in silence. He was looking at Beryl, and she, catching his gaze, felt her heart give a strange, sudden throb.

"You—you have heard something?" she said, hurriedly.

Madge, looking up from her letter at the sound of the sharp, troubled ring in her friend's voice, read, too, that strange expression in her husband's face.

"What is it, Cosmo?" she asked, timidly.

He held an open newspaper in his hand, and at their joint questioning he pointed to a paragraph contained in it.

"Shipping List," murmured Madge, vaguely, as she left the room. "What of that?"

But Beryl Marsden's face grew like stone. She saw plainly enough what was printed there. Only a list of passengers homeward bound in the mail steamer from Madras, and midway in that list was her husband's name, "John Marsden."

How distinctly she remembered when last they parted! How, in frenzy, and terror, and wild grief, she had accused him of being the cause of her children's danger, and scarcely paused to say farewell, in the agony of mind caused by Ivor Grant's message.

The fall of the wood-ash, the tick of the clock, were the only audible sounds, and she rose from her chair at last with a faint, nervous shiver, and stirred the logs into a brighter blaze.

"I can do no more work to-night," she thought to herself, as she put the scattered sheets together, and wheeled the table away into its recess. Then she opened the door, and went out into the dimly lighted passage.

The little study set apart for her use was far removed from the reception and morning rooms. As she moved slowly along, her eyes turned half-unconsciously to the staircase leading to that disused suite of rooms opening on the north corridor. Her thoughts were far enough away from any memory of Madge Dunbar's story. Yet suddenly a deathly chill seemed to fall over her, as if some numbing blast had swept across her face.

Involuntarily she paused, and her eyes caught sight of a figure moving swiftly along in the dim gloom of the unlighted corridor. Half in wonder her glance followed it. A tall figure in dusky, swaying garments, and drawn over its head a monk's cowl. Then swift as thought came the memory of Mrs. Dunbar's story, and Beryl caught her breath in a sudden spasm of fear. An instant, and she sprang up the staircase, her light feet echoing on the polished oak. The figure turned. At the same moment her foot slipped on the polished oak surface, and she fell backwards, clutching at the balustrade to save or break her fall.

Brusled and shaken, she rose at last, and again, as if in mockery, the flickering moonlight showed her the long, dusky corridor stretching before her. It was empty. Not a sight or sign of living creature as the moon rays swept it from end to end.

Dazed and shaken, she groped her way back and found herself at last in her own room. The reflection of her face startled her as she met it in the glass. Involuntarily she pressed her hands to her eyes as if to shut out their fixed look of horror.

"What have I seen?" she asked herself, and only the wild throbs of her heart answered the question. She sank into a chair before the fire, and there remained lost in deep and confused thought.

The sound of Madge Dunbar's laughing voice struck on her ear at last like a jarring discord. The presence of the pretty little woman fluttering into the room in her Parisian toilette and glittering jewels seemed to her incongruous and irritating.

"Is anything the matter?" she asked, abruptly. "Mercy! you look as if you had seen a ghost."

"I think I have," said Beryl Marsden.

Among the passengers who landed at Gravesend from the Orient was a short, commonplace-looking man, with a shrunken yellow face and a pompous manner. He went to the best hotel, and gave autocratic orders, and generally comported himself as one accustomed to rule and dictate.

Obsequious waiters bowed before him, and conducted him to a private sitting room already ordered, requested his instructions as to dinner, and presented offerings in the shape of newspapers and magazines to while away the time until that meal should be ready.

"I am expecting a visitor," said the pompous individual. "You will show him here directly he arrives."

His solitude was not of long continuance. A knock at the door was speedily followed by the appearance of his expected visitor. For an instant the two men surveyed each other critically, as if taking mental notes of each other's capabilities.

Then the occupant of the chair nodded carelessly, and remarked:

"Count Savona, I presume?"

"At your service, sir," said the stranger, with a polite bow that seemed to convey a rebuke against the businessness of his reception.

"Take a chair," said the Englishman. "I'm John Marsden, as, no doubt, you guess. Now, may I ask you've thought proper to drag me over all these thousands of miles of sea and land? It nearly cost me my life, I assure you. Tiger-cats may be very pretty things to look at and play with, but they're the mischief with their claws."

"So I presume," said the Count with a quiet smile. "I am a wise man, Mr. Marsden, and leave such playthings to those who like scratches better than purring. However, since you are here, let us to business. You may be very sure I have not asked you to come to England for nothing. What would you say if I informed you that there was a nice little property with a comfortable rent-roll at your disposal—dependent only on a very simple condition?"

The sallow face flushed suddenly.

"What do you mean?" asked John Marsden.

"Just what I say. The property comes to your wife. I have taken the trouble to trace it out—no small trouble or difficulty, I assure you. It is fortunate that you did not come to open warfare, because you have an opportunity now for being magnanimous. She knows nothing yet. You have only to throw yourself at her feet, or let her throw herself at yours, to forget and forgive the past, and step into the position of an English land owner."

"I—I can't believe it."

The Count shrugged his shoulders.

"Odd that people always find it harder to believe good fortune than bad. It's quite true, I assure you. I advised you to come home because it is better policy to make up your quarrel with your wife before she learns that she is an heiress. It looks disinterested now. A month hence it won't."

"But—but," stammered John Marsden foolishly. "I don't think she will make it up. I've insulted her, quarreled with her—I've never sent her a penny since you told me about her going on with that fellow Grant, and now how the deuce can I go to her and expect her to be friends? She'll never come back."

"Ah," said the Count, with his chill smile, "there steps in the beauty of your English law. Madame the wife may quarrel as she pleases with monsieur the husband, but when monsieur the husband desires that she shall live under his roof madame cannot help herself, unless—well, your wife is not a woman to avail herself of that outlet, or she would have done it before now. Do you know how she has supported herself these three

"No," said John Marsden, sulkily.

"By writing. She is quite a celebrated authoress now. You don't know what a gold mine you have found."

"Where is she now?"

"At Vaux Abbey, with her friends the Dunbars. Oh, I assure you her contact has been quite irreproachable. When your telegram came, refusing to receive her in India, she was with her father. After the first shock was over she recognized and accepted her position without a murmur, turned her wits to work, and took to writing; stuck to it, persevered at it, won recognition despite the difficulty, and has fairly floated herself now. She's a wonderful woman, my friend. I'm inclined to think you throw her away a little too easily."

"You seem to know a great deal about her," said John Marsden, looking at the Count suspiciously.

"I do. You are not jealous, are you? I make it my business to know everything about anyone in whom I am interested."

"And why has my wife the honor of arousing your interest?"

"That is not the point at issue. We need not discuss it."

"And you are sure this fellow Grant was in love with her?"

"As sure as that I live."

"And she with him?"

"Certainly. But only platonically in love. The sort of thing one reads of in novels—long blindness, sudden awakening, temptation, self-conquest, renunciation. It only depends on you to keep back the third volume from the inevitable happy issue."

"On me?"

"Certainly," said the Count, with an irrepressible sneer. "Take back your own property and guard it better in future. There are few men with a handsomer wife, none with a cleverer one. Ivor Grant knows her value better than you."

"Curse Ivor Grant!"

"With all my heart. He is very unfortunate—in war as well as in love. You know he volunteered into the Mexican service after he left England."

"You told me so. Is he dead yet?"

"Severely wounded, I believe. Has a Quixotic attendant—a simple sort of fellow whom he rescued from starvation or something."

"Have you seen my wife lately?" asked Marsden.

"No. Your wife is no great friend of mine," answered the Count. "Captain Grant took care of that. Were I to present myself to her, she would not receive me. I am sorry for it. I admired her. She was an interesting study."

"She?" sneered John Marsden. "In what way?"

"In all. Perhaps, like most husbands, you resent the fact that your wife should be an object of interest to any other man. That is such an old idea. The mere fact of marriage doesn't sink a woman's individuality, doesn't blind others to her beauty or her charm. Yet you husbands think it ought to. There are some women, my friend, easier to win than to hold."

(To be continued.)

MAY AVOID AN ACCIDENT.

Precautions that Wayfarers May Find in Their Advantage.

The rule requiring a traveler on a public highway before crossing a steam railroad to look and listen is held by the Court of Appeals in the case of Apollonia Fejowski, as administratrix, against the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company not to apply when the situation was such that if the traveler looked and listened he would not have discovered the danger.

The plaintiff's intestate was killed while crossing the tracks of the defendant at Edison avenue in the city of Schenectady. The accident happened at 6:30 in the evening of Oct. 17, 1935. The deceased was seated on the seat of a two-horse market wagon, driving. When about fifteen feet from the railroad tracks he stopped to allow a freight train to pass. The night was cloudy and dark, with neither moon nor stars visible. There was no flagman at the crossing nor light near it. The freight train made a loud noise and after it had reached a point about 100 feet past the crossing the deceased said "Get up," the team started and as he was thus driving across the track he was struck by an engine following a short distance behind the train and instantly killed. There was no evidence tending to show that the decedent either looked or listened and it did not appear whether he was familiar with the crossing or not. A witness whose eyesight and hearing were good was walking on the sidewalk. He also stopped and waited for the freight train to pass. As the decedent started to drive over the track the witness walked alongside, and, as he testified, listened and looked as he went upon the track, but neither saw nor heard the approaching engine until the crash came. He was where he could have seen the engine if it was visible, and could have heard it if it was audible above the roar of the train.

On the trial a jury gave the plaintiff a verdict, which was affirmed by the Third Appellate Division. The Court of Appeals, while holding that the railroad company in backing the engine in the way it did behind the freight train cannot be said to have exercised reasonable care, orders a reversal because of an error in the charge of the justice. Judge Vann, for the court of last resort, says that in the absence of any evidence that the deceased either looked or listened before going upon the track the trial jury should not have been permitted to assume that he did so from the circumstances of the accident, and a charge that they might so infer and permitting them to find a verdict upon that theory is reversible error.

Carbolic acid was discovered by Runge in 1834 as a constituent of common coal tar. Its properties were fully investigated by Laurent in 1841, who termed it hydrated oxide of phenyl. This name, however, never met with favor, for, out of respect for Runge, the discoverer, the name he gave it has always been retained.

FARMS AND FARMERS

Irrigating a Farm Garden.
Many farmers feel so sure of success with artificial watering that they are putting down artesian wells and intend to build reservoirs as soon as possible, the past dry seasons causing them to realize the necessity of a most constant supply of moisture. Nearly all the wells are 2 inches in diameter and cost from 50 to 80 cents per foot. The flow amounts to from 15 to 35 gallons per minute. One 3½-inch well that cost $200 and is 295 feet deep flows about 1,300 gallons per minute, though the amount has never been accurately measured. It is thought the flow of some wells near this large one has diminished and it is possible that the artesian water supply may be limited.

A few fields have been flooded or "wet up" direct from these wells during the fall and winter, and have produced the following season 25 to 30 bushels of wheat to the acre, and other crops in proportion, while fields not so treated produced less than half this amount. Irrigation here is largely confined to gardens, the water in most cases being used direct from the wells, but a few farmers have reservoirs which aid in the economical use of the water, thus giving much better results. One garden has been irrigated five

Select Good Seed.
Replanting in the field is obnoxious to the farmers, hence they should select good seed. When plants are missing in the hills or rows the appearance of the field is not attractive. It is better and cheaper to buy selected seed than to perform the labor of replanting that which would be unnecessary and which could be prevented by making a proper beginning. The failure to properly prepare the ground, too little care given to the covering of the seeds and economizing in the use of seeds are also causes of loss.

Sorghum for Stock Feeding.
Any farmer who can grow corn successfully can succeed with sorghum, and will find it a decided addition to the winter supply of stock food, although those without a great deal of experience with it seem to think it can be used to advantage only as a supplement to the pasture. To grow sorghum successfully the soil must be put in good condition, broken up deep and well prepared. Make the seed bed fine and sow the seed any time this month. Grown for hay, the seed is sown broadcast at the rate of two bushels per acre and harrowed in, but it is better to grow it in rows two or three feet apart, the latter distance being preferable, enabling one to cultivate with the horse. When grown in rows the culture should be the same as with corn, and the plot should be kept free from weeds. Stock of all kinds eat sorghum readily and it will pay to experiment with a small plot of it this season. In feeding it, as with all foods that are new to the animals, it should be given in small quantities at first until the animals get used to it.

An Underground Cistern.
Mrs. Lou Delwiler, of O'Brien County, writes Iowa Homestead: "Will you please give a good plan for an underground cistern? I would like one so the pump can be in the house." To this the editor of the Homestead replies: "A cistern is built according to the customary methods with an inlet for the rain water. In the bottom or to one side of the cistern is built a filter, which consists of a solid brick wall made of soft brick. A lead pipe leads from this to the cistern pump in the kitchen. All cisterns should be provided with an overflow pipe to let off the surplus water in times of flood. We find this a better plan than to depend on cutting off the flow in the filter, as that will sometimes be neglected."

Trimming Plum Trees.
The trimming of plum trees is similar to that of the peach. Do not trim a plum tree for two or three years, as the little shoots bear the first fruit, and let them remain until you have had a good crop. Afterward trim the trees systematically, says Mr. Skillman, a successful New Jersey plum grower.

Farm Notes.
Bordeaux mixture controls downy mildew on lima beans.

The Iron Mountain is a rich peach and almost melts in the mouth.

A haphazard, go-easy way in farming is not going to bring a big profit this year.

Make the boy's interest in the farm so profitable that he will be anxious to make farming his life work.

Cheery culture was started by Long Island farmers several years ago, but it did not pay and has been abandoned.

The farmer as well as the business man who is going to forge to the front these times is the one who thinks and plans.

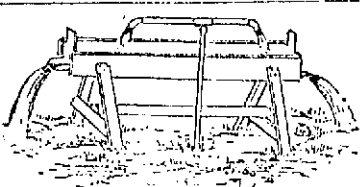

Broom corn should have frequent cultivation till the plants are two feet high. Then the cultivation may be stopped unless needed to retain moisture.

It has been demonstrated that in the sections where thorough drainage is practiced larger crops are produced, and at less cost than where drainage is neglected.

The currant worm is ready to begin work on the first approach of warm weather. Powdered hellebore is the remedy, which may be used with water or applied in the dry condition, while the leaves are damp from rain or dew.

String beans can be obtained during the entire summer by planting once a month for successive supplies. The seed germinates quickly in warm weather, and the plants grow rapidly. They can also be extensively grown for pickling.

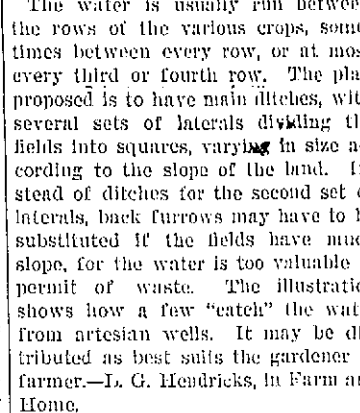

When the old strawberry beds are out of use plant them under for late cabbage or turnips. If preferred the land may remain for a garden plot next spring, but if such is preferred the bed must be seeded. Late in the fall cover the beds with manure and plow the plot next spring.

AN ARTESIAN WATER SUPPLY.

years and is producing all kinds of vegetables in abundance and of fine quality. A few gardens have been watered by wind-pumps. This method gives excellent results, especially where a small reservoir is used. Other gardens have been watered by pumping from streams. This mode of irrigation must necessarily be limited, as the amount of water in streams is very small during a dry time. In fact, I have seen it almost dry.

The water is usually run between the rows of the various crops, sometimes between every row, or at most every third or fourth row. The plan proposed is to have main ditches, with several sets of laterals dividing the fields into squares, varying in size according to the slope of the land. Instead of ditches for the second set of laterals, back furrows may have to be substituted if the fields have much slope, for the water is too valuable to permit of waste. The illustration shows how a few "catch" the water from artesian wells. It may be distributed as best suits the gardener or farmer.—L. G. Hendricks, in Farm and Home.

THE GRADUS PEN.

Those who find the best profit in raising the wrinkled varieties of pens will be glad to have the Gradus, shown in the illustration. Not only is the quality of this variety equal to that of any wrinkled sort, but it is better than any of the smooth sorts that are early in season. The Gradus combines quality with extra earliness and extreme productiveness. Most of the wrinkled sorts are rather tender, but this variety may be planted as early as any of the smooth sorts without injury, and is said to be the only wrinkled variety with which this can be done. The growth of the vine is strong and healthy, and the bearing qualities are of the best. The pods are large, holding from eight to ten peas. While the sort is comparatively new, it has been tested quite extensively, and if it does as well generally as in the localities where it has been tested it will be an acquisition.

Deep Plowing.

We used to believe in what we read when young about the value of plowing deep to bring up the fertility that had leached down through the surface soil into the subsoil. Our opinion was changed when we tested the deep plowing upon a field with a clay subsoil that we planted with corn. Later experiments have more thoroughly convinced us that deep plowing, by which we mean a depth of more than four to six inches, is seldom beneficial in this climate, whatever it may be in other sections of the country. The crops like

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Peeling Apples.
In peeling apples it is disagreeable to see a sort of brown rust creeping over the white pulp if the slices have to stand very long. This brown coloring is a pigment of the actual nature of rust, caused by the presence of iron in the fruit and the oxidation of that iron by the air. The acid in the pulp helps in this oxidation considerably. By setting each quarter or slice as it is peeled in a basin of cold water no air contact is possible and the brownness is avoided. But the water draws out the acids and there is a sacrifice of flavor to color if this plan is used and the apples soaked too long. Any discolored slices will turn white again if rubbed with a piece of lemon.

To Mend a Lamp Collar.
Mend a lamp loose in the collar with sifted plaster of paris mixed to a very soft paste with beaten white of an egg. Have everything ready before wetting up the plaster and work quickly, so it may set in place. With several lamps to mend, wet enough plaster for one at a time. It takes less than five minutes to set and is utterly worthless if one tries working it over. Metal work apart from the glass needs the soldering iron. First the break well with powdered resin, tie the parts firmly together, lay the stock of solder above the break and touch the iron down on it lightly but firmly. When the solder cools remove the melted resin with a cloth dipped in alcohol.

Cabinet Pudding.
Beat two eggs, add a pint and a half of milk to them, grease a pudding mold, sprinkle the bottom with raisins or chopped citron, then put in a layer of cake and a sprinkle of fruit, and continue with cake and fruit until one quart of crumbs are used; add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and a pinch of salt to the eggs. Pour the liquid over the crumbs, and put the cover on the mold. Let stand fifteen minutes, then place the mold in a pan of boiling water, and boil for one hour; turn out, and serve with lemon sauce.

Curry of Chicken and Rice.
Make a white sauce as follows: Melt one tablespoonful of butter without browning; add one tablespoonful of flour and stir until smooth; add one cup of milk and stir continually until it thickens; add one teaspoonful of curry powder, one-half of a cup of boiled rice, one-half of a cup of cold chopped chicken. When heated serve.—Table Talk.

Potato Cakes.
Take cold mashed potatoes, moisten with a little cream, and work in sufficient flour, in which baking powder is mixed, to make a firm dough, adding a pinch of salt. Roll out the potato paste, thinly sprinkle with dry flour or a beaten egg, cut into rounds, and bake on a hot griddle for ten minutes; butter while hot, and serve.

Beef Hash.
Chop rather fine cold roast beef and twice the amount of cold boiled potato. Put a piece of butter into a frying pan, and when melted put in the meat and potatoes. Add enough beef gravy or stock to moisten; stir occasionally; let it brown on the bottom of the pan, and then turn out like an omelet on a hot platter.

Granulated Eyelids.
An alum paste made by rubbing a small piece of alum into the white of an egg until a curd is formed. Apply to the eyelids upon retiring at night; lying a piece of soft linen over the eyes will often entirely cure the trouble.

Brief Hints.
Never mix a French dressing until ready to use. The vinegar and oil will separate.

Add an acid touch of lemon juice to all fish sauces except those in which there is milk.

A tablespoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid in the whitening process.

To clean sponges soak well in milk for several hours and then rinse a few times in clear water.

In using a gas stove the oven will at times become very hot. To cool quickly place a dish of cold water in it.

When beating eggs a small pinch of salt added to the white will cause them to beat a stiff froth more readily.

Boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm or a little salt, or a little gum arabic dissolved.

Cut flowers may be revived when wilted by placing the stems in boiling water and allowing them to stand until the water cools.

Always keep olive oil in the refrigerator and see that it is tightly corked. Never put more oil in the table cruet than two days' supply. It will grow rancid.

If copper or brass is very dirty put some fine salt on a board, dip into it a cut lemon or vinegar and rub on the metal. This strong acid will remove the worst stain.

A useful sauce is made by mincing six shallots finely with two sprigs of parsley. Place these in a saucepan with half a pint of gravy or broth and boil slowly till the shallot is quite tender. Before removing from the fire add a teaspoonful of vinegar and pepper and salt to taste.

Republican Caucuses.

The republican caucuses for the election of delegates to the convention at Nekeosa, where delegates to the state convention will be named, occur on Saturday evening. There may be some fun at these caucuses, if the opposing factions are evenly enough divided to make it anywhere near an even thing.

The La Follette followers expect a comparatively easy victory in this city, and in fact through the entire county, but of course you can't always tell until the returns are in. The authorities at the state capitol expect a solid delegation from Wood county for the administration.

It is stated that democrats have been asked to attend these caucuses, but this they should not do, as voting at a republican caucus will preclude their voting at a democratic caucus. The democrats will have up a ticket this fall, in both county and state, that will be worthy of the vote of any honest man, and democrats should expend their energies in electing this ticket, and if they do so there will be no question of which way the election will go.

Tell a man he has slept 20 years and he'll give you a pitying stare but it's a fact just the same. The man who has reached the age of 60 years has spent one-third of his life, or twenty years, in slumber and if a man is lucky enough to live until he is 75 he has Rip Van Winkle beaten to a standstill. The average person sleeps 8 hours a day or exactly one-third of his day's life. Again, if you abruptly inform a man of 60 that he has stowed a herd of cattle under his belt in his time he will put you down as a third year man in an insane asylum. Figures, however, don't lie and you can give him a statistical knock-out. A healthy man eats on an average one pound of meat every day of his life and in 60 years he will devour 21,900 pounds. Allowing 1000 pounds as an average weight of a beef, you have 22 cattle, a respectable herd.—Rx.

DURING a talk with a prominent republican from the north end of the county this week, that gentleman stated that it was his private opinion that there was no possible show for the republicans to win out in either the state or county this year, provided, of course, that the democrats put up men for the different offices whom the people have confidence in. This should not be a hard matter to do, as the years of failure have gradually weeded out the politicians who make the seeking of office a business, and left only men who are democrats because they believe in the principles of democracy.

PROF. JOHNSON IS KILLED.

Tragic Death of Dean of Wisconsin University.

AT HIS SUMMER HOME.

His Head Crushed Under the Wheel of the Wagon from Which He Fell.

Madison, Wis., June 24.—Word was received yesterday that J. B. Johnson, dean of the college of mechanics and engineering of the University of Wisconsin, had been killed at Pier Cove, Mich. His head was crushed by the wheel of a loaded wagon from the top of which he had fallen while taking a load of household goods from the depot at Farmville to the summer cottage at Pier Cove.

The death is a severe blow to the university and the state. Gov. La Follette mourns the deceased as a personal friend and as one of the greatest educators of Wisconsin. Acting President E. A. Hoge of the university and W. F. Vilas and E. J. Stevens, regents, have issued statements of condolence.

Dean Johnson was elected head of the college of engineering January 17, 1899, when the place was created. He was then professor of engineering in Washington University at St. Louis, Mo. For years he had been recognized as an engineer of high rank and when elected to the deanship he was president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education. He was professor in the St. Louis institution for sixteen years prior to coming to Madison. He was fellow and past vice president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. For a long time he was president of the Engineers' club in St. Louis. He was also a member of the International Society for the Testing of Engineering Materials, the American Waterworks Association, the St. Louis Academy of Science and the Missouri Historical Society.

Dean Johnson's addresses on engineering subjects and his magazine contributions have been widely reviewed.

CARROLL GRADUATION.

College Commencement Exercises Opened with Baccalaureate Sermon by Rev. Chapin.

Wausau, Wis., June 23.—[Special.]—Commencement week for the students of Carroll College began yesterday morning with a baccalaureate sermon at the Presbyterian church. STORY OF SUGAR.

Graphic Description of the Methods of Reducing Sugar Cane and Beet Root to the Sugar of Commerce--A Bit of History and a Mass of Uncommon and Interesting News Given.

SUGAR is a generic term, having one meaning in chemistry, another in commerce and still another in politics. In the slang phraseology of the day, sugar has supplanted "soap" as the agent which keeps political machines greased and accomplishes many things which the uninitiated public fails to understand.

The sugar of commerce, however, while it has been suspected of mixing in politics, has a more important office than that of a lubricant of the wheels of government. If it sweetens the cup for some of our statesmen it also fills the cup for thousands of toilers, gives scores of thousands of little folks the stomach ache and, in one form or another, makes America the paradise of dentists. America does not make a very large proportion of the world's supply of raw saccharine matter, but it refines a great deal of it, importing for the purpose something like 2,700,000,000 pounds annually. While the United States produces only about 600,000,000 pounds of cane sugar annually, it refines many times that amount, an indication that this country not only has a very big sweet tooth but has a of size takes place. The ordinary practice on sugar estates is to renew a part of the plantation every year.

Sugar refining, to which passing reference has been made, has become a gigantic industry, and the process has been improved so much by the introduction of machinery that whereas formerly only the very wealthy could afford to use refined sugar, now it is one of the commonest necessities of life. Even so late as the last half of the last century, sugar was by no means in general use, its cost being prohibitive excepting among the rich.

The process of refining sugar is substantially the same in all countries, although it has been brought to greater perfection in America than elsewhere. The preparation of raw sugar is interesting. The extraction of the juice from the cane is effected by simple pressure. The mills in use are powerful machines. Some idea of the strength of these mills will be formed from the fact that one of the rollers weighs upward of five tons. The axles are 12 inches in diameter. The canes, freed from all loose leaves, are passed through between the rollers under the communicating with a condenser into which a rush of cold water is continually passing, so as to condense all the steam or vapor that arises from the boiling liquor. The water which is continually rushing into the condenser is as steadily withdrawn again by a pump. There is thus a constant vacuum in the pan, and consequently the liquid will boil at a much lower temperature than it would in the open air or pan. By the time the vacuum pan is full the contents have thickened by the formation of crystals of sugar into a mass the consistency of thick gruel. This is drawn off into a heater and kept merely warm until it can be run into pots to cool and complete crystallization. The residuum is boiled and reboiled, making the different lower grades of sugar. The result of this process is raw sugar, which must be refined in order to make the sugar of commerce.

Sugar refineries are built eleven or is to pump sawdust and bone black into the filter to gather the foreign matter, and then strain the fluid through jute and cotton. After reboiling the liquor is run through filters of charred bone. These filters are iron cylinders about six feet in diameter and thirty feet high ordinarily, but in the mammoth Havemeyer refinery in Brooklyn is a char-filter containing thirty tons of bone charcoal. The dark liquor percolates slowly through the coarse powder. The result is that it flows out at the bottom a perfectly twelve stories high, and the raw sugar is first hoisted to the upper story, where it is dissolved in large tanks of hot water, care being taken to use as little water for the purpose as possible. Formerly a quantity of bullock's blood was stirred into the solution of transparent and pure solution of sugar. The charcoal can only be used for a few days at a time, because it gradually loses its purifying power, but it is taken out and reboiled and then is as good as ever.

The liquor as it flows from the charcoal filter is a mixture of pure sugar and pure water. The application of heat is the only mode of expelling the water, and this unfortunately blackens the sugar again. After being heated in vacuum pans, the sugar is run into sugar-loaf forms which, after cooling, are carried to a room warmed by steam pipes. This warmth facilitates the flow of the treacle or syrup to the aperture at the bottom of the form. To get rid of the coating of colored syrup which still hangs about the crystals of sugar, a small quantity of a saturated solution of pure white sugar is poured on the top of the form. This strong liquid is unable to dissolve any more sugar, but being more fluid than the sticky coating of syrup adhering to the crystals, it mixes with the coatings and makes them fluid enough to flow down to the bottom of the form, leaving the crystals clear of syrup and coloring.

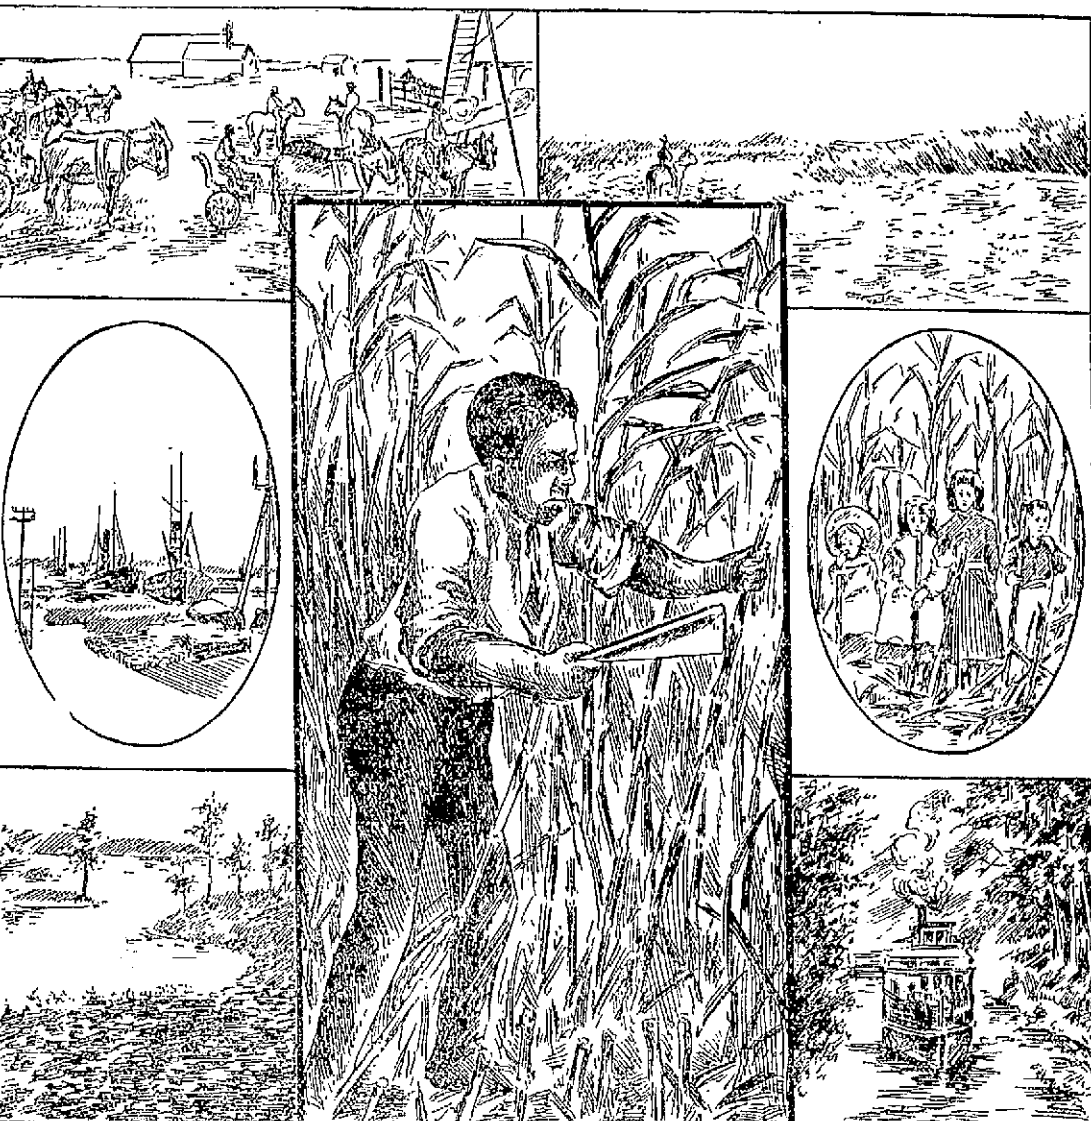

The liquor draining from the forms is reboiled and forms leaves of inferior grade, and the liquor drained from the inferior leaves is again boiled into yellow sugars.

Crushed sugar is simply inferior leaves crushed while soft and moist. The syrup which drains from refined sugar is reboiled and constitutes the "golden drip" syrup sold in the stores.

Beet Sugar Process.

The process with beet sugar, which is of inferior sweetening quality, is quite similar to that pursued with cane sugar, except that the juice is treated with lime or sulphuric acid to clarify it, is strained through flannel, and the filtered juice is mixed with lime-water beat up with the white of egg. Beet root gives about 10 per cent of saccharine matter as compared with the 18 per cent of cane sugar. The nongold-wurtzel beet is best for sugar making. These dry details give an idea of sugar refining. The production of sugar, the various stages of its development from cane to marketable product, and the commerce in sugar constitute a prodigious industry. The beet sugar production of the world amounts to 3,900,000 tons annually, while the production of cane sugar reaches an annual total of 2,960,000 tons. A fair proportion of the world's output of raw cane sugar comes from America, not to exceed 265,000 tons, the cane sugar growing being confined to the States of Louisiana, Texas, Florida and Mississippi, the first named State producing all but 6,000 tons of it. The greatest cane sugar country in the world is Cuba, with 850,000 tons annually.

refining influence upon one of the world's great products.

The sugar of commerce is obtained from the juice of the sugar cane, a genus of the grasses, which is found chiefly in tropical and sub-tropical regions, and is also obtained from a species of the beet root which is cultivated for the purpose extensively abroad, and of late years to a considerable and constantly increasing extent in some portions of the United States. As a matter of fact, the world's annual production of beet sugar is much larger than the production of cane sugar. Cane sugar is the kind in common use, or at least is supposed to be, and as cane sugar is entitled to precedence on account of age, it should first receive attention.

Limited Area of Sugar Growing.

Sugar cane is not cosmopolitan. It is rarely found at all, and never in profitable condition, north of latitude 32 degrees north, or south of latitude 22 degrees south. The cane-producing countries are Cuba, Java, the United States, the Philippine Islands, Brazil, the Hawaiian Islands, Mauritius, Demarara, Egypt, Barbadoes, Peru, Porto Rico, Trinidad, Guadeloupe, Reunion, Martinique, Jamaica and the Lesser Antilles.

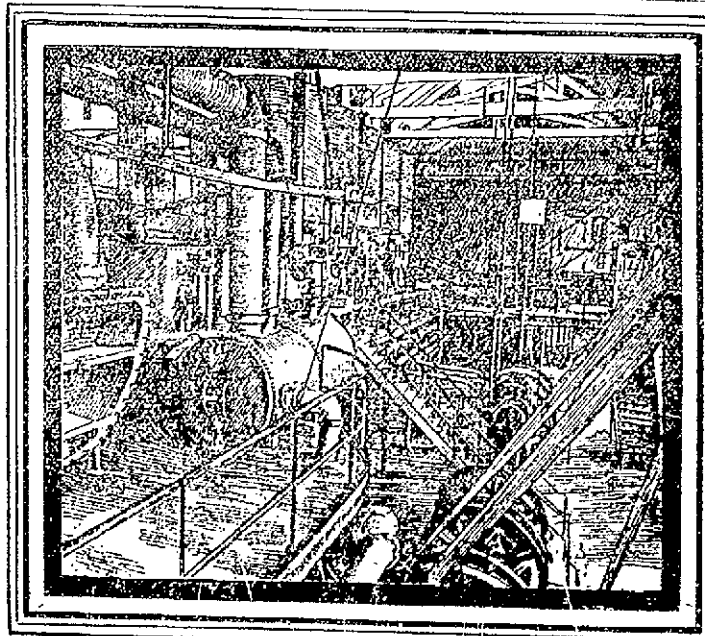

During slave days in the West Indies and in the Southern States of America, hand hoeing was universal, but the plow is now very generally used when the nature of the ground permits. The best varieties are ready for cutting in about ten months from the time of planting; but other varieties require from twelve to twenty months to develop. When the canes are fully ripe they are cut a little above the ground, and tied in bundles to be conveyed to the mill. Fresh canes spring from the root, so that the plantation does not require to be renewed for several years; but the canes of the first crop are the largest, and a gradual decrease greatest pressure that can be brought to bear upon them. The rollers revolve only from two to four times per minute. From 100 pounds of cane, 65 or 75 pounds of cane juice will be expressed. The juice, which is of a sweetish taste, and of the color of dirty water, passes direct from the mill to a reservoir, where it usually receives a small dose of quicklime, and without delay runs off to large iron or copper vessels, heated either by a fire underneath or by steam pipes in the liquid. The scum rising to the top is skimmed off or the liquid is drawn off at the bottom. The concentration of the juice is partly effected in a series of large, hemispherical iron pans set in a row with a large fire under the one at the end. This one fire, which runs along under the rows of pans, is sufficient to heat the juice in the distant pans and to increase the heat as the pans near the source of heat, until the first two or three boil and the first one seethes and foams violently. The juice is gradually drawn from one pan to another until it reaches the pan in which the greatest degree of heat is found. After the concentration has been carried to a given point and all the scum has been got rid of, the application of high heat is suspended, and the liquor, now of the color of port wine, and of the consistency of oil, is drawn into a vacuum pan, where the concentration is completed at the lowest possible temperature.

The vacuum pan is made of copper of a spherical form. The bottom is double, leaving a space of an inch or two for the admission of steam between the two bottoms, and there is generally a long coil of copper pipe of three or four inches diameter above the inner bottom, so as to still further increase the amount of heating surface. This apparatus is made perfectly air and steam tight. Leading from the upper dome there is a large pipe sugar, and the heat being gradually raised, the albumen of the blood coagulated and rose to the surface in the form of a thick scum, bringing with it nearly all the mechanical impurities floating in the fluid. Now the same result is obtained by an air blast which stirs the fluid in huge tanks called "blow-ups."

Two methods of filtration are employed. The older method is to pass the hot liquid into cloth bags. These filters are made of very closely woven cotton cloth capable of retaining the minutest particle of mechanical impurity. In order to facilitate the passage of the fluid through these filters they are suspended in an iron closet and subjected to an atmosphere of steam. The other, and later, method,

WILD BEASTS IN A POCKET.

Corralled by Ranchmen in Arizona and Ruthlessly Slaughtered.

For several months past the mountain lions, bears and wolves that abound in some parts of Arizona have been playing sad havoc with the stock on the ranch of Colin Campbell in Cochise county. With 10,000 cattle on the range, the heavy losses in calves and yearlings by the ravages of the wild animals have cut down the dividends of the stock company which owns the range.

"Charley" Montgomery, famous all over Arizona as a hunter and who was chief of scouts under General Crook during the trouble with the Apaches, was engaged to exterminate the animals which have been raiding the herds. Montgomery engaged 100 men of the Pima tribe and held a big round up of the "varmints."

Early in the morning his Indians and a score of cowboys surrounded a district five miles square in the foothills of the Chiricahua range and gradually closed in toward the center, with 200 dogs in the rodeo. As they reached the center of the circle catamounts, black bears, coyotes and an occasional grizzly bear tried to break through the line, but were met by a shower of bullets. Dozens of animals perished in the attempt to escape, but 200 others were finally cornered in a box canyon, while redskins and cowpunchers picked them off from the rocks above.

There were scores of close conflicts with the enraged and frightened brutes, and in one melee four Indians were fearfully mangled by a grizzly before their shots finally felled the bear. One of the reds, Antonio Herma, a former chief of the tribe, received fatal wounds from the claws of a big fellow. The dogs closed in on the victims and dozens of them were killed before the slaughter was complete. The final count showed nineteen dead mountain lions, five grizzlies, two lynxes and over 100 coyotes--doubtless the biggest round-up of wild animals that has ever occurred in Arizona.

THE HOLY CITY.

Jerusalem Still Resembles a Great Fortress of the Middle Ages.

Jerusalem is literally "built upon its own heap." Below the houses, courts and paved streets of the present unkept city are the distinguishable remains of eight older cities--those of Solomon, Nebuchadnezzar, Herod, Hadrian, Constantine, Omar, Godfrey, Saladin, Suleiman, writes Walter Williams from the "Holy City" to his paper in Columbia, Mo. Jerusalem has been besieged twenty-seven times, a record of vicissitude unparalleled in the history of the world's cities. It has been burned, sacked, razed to the ground, its inhabitants of every faith put to the sword, all the woes uttered by its own prophets against it have come to pass, yet Jerusalem still resembles a great fortress of the middle ages. Seen from the Mount of Olives, its massive gray walls, its flat-roofed houses, its mosques and churches with their conspicuous towers and minarets, present a marvelous picture, beautiful, sublime, unaltered, from the picture gallery of the mind. The city itself has narrow, dirty streets--the water supply for its 70,000 people comes in a four-inch pipe--the open courts are few and small, the houses are hunched together with no regard for room or cleanliness. Some houses are underground and others on top of the high inclosing walls. The people are fanatical, ignorant, selfish. There is much to detract from the ideal city, but despite all this and more Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives is the same in its essential details, the same in the framework of its setting, the same in fascinating suggestion, as the Jerusalem of which David sang, and over which Jesus wept.

Crabs that Hunt Rabbits.

Catching rabbits with a crab is a favorite pastime of the country boys in the lands lying on the English coast. One would think a mouse trap and a bit of cheese would be a safer method, but it isn't. The way they work it is this:

A large, lively crab is caught on the shore and pressed into service. From a lighted candle hot grease is dropped on the back of the crustacean and the candle stuck upright in this way on the shell. As soon as the grease holding the candle has hardened firmly the crab is placed in one end of a rabbit burrow, at the other end of which there is a net. The rabbits, seeing the strange looking creature coming toward them sideways with a lighted candle on its back become terrified and bolt out to be caught in the net of the hunters. In due time the crab also emerges and is caught and placed in the mouth of another burrow to scare out other rabbits. This continues until the boys have bagged all the rabbits they want. If the crab proves himself lively and works hard in their behalf the hunters generally restore him to the sea after the night's sport is over.

Mental Variations.

If there is anything certain, it is that no intelligent person will retain all the same views at 30 that he held at 20, or retain those at 50 that he held at 30. Nor are there mental variations to be deplored. Emerson says, "Why should you keep your head over your shoulder, lest you contradict somewhat you have stated in this or that public place? Suppose you should contradict yourself--what then? It seems to be a rule of wisdom never to rely on your memory alone, but bring the past for judgment into the thousand-eyed present, and live ever in a new day."

RUDOLPH.

It is reported that a tramp visited the home of John Coulthart on Wednesday while all the family was away except Ray, an eleven year old boy, and attempted to get away with something of value, but failed. The story is that the tramp entered the house and after he had questioned the boy and discovered that the family was absent, the boy picked up a Winchester rifle and advised him to move on. The gun was not loaded, and while the boy was trying to get a shell into the weapon the tramp grabbed the gun and got it away from the boy. Ray then backed into an adjoining room and locked the door, and remained there until the tramp left. It could not be discovered that the tramp had taken anything.

TAPPED THE TILL.

SNEAK THIEF IN ST. PAUL DEPOT

Unknown Party Succeeds in Getting Away with $26 White Employee X're Out to Supper.

On Thursday evening, between six and seven o'clock, some party, whose identity is unknown, entered the St. Paul depot while the employees were at supper and breaking open the till, took all the money contained therein, amounting to $26.

The last man in the depot that afternoon was Tim Reilly, and he left for supper about 6:20 and returned about 7:00 o'clock. When Mr. Reilly got back to the depot the baggage man had arrived just a few minutes before and they discovered that the till had been opened and the contents removed.

None of the locks or fastenings on the doors had been disturbed, with the exception of one door that is usually hooked on the inside which was found to be unhooked.

It is supposed that the person who did the work had hidden himself in the freight room sometime during the day, probably when the passenger train came in about 5:30. There he had remained in concealment until all the employees had gone to supper, when he merely had to walk from the freight house into the baggage room, and then into the depot proper and help himself.

It is thought that the man had expected to find more in the till than he did, and there are times when he might have done so, but no large amount is ever allowed to accumulate in the till.

The officers have been looking for anybody of a suspicious nature, but as nobody saw the man, nor saw anybody hanging about whom they suspect, there is not much chance of finding the guilty party.

Besides the above there were 5 sweepstake events which were for one dollar entrance fee and a division of the money. In these events our men came out with their share of the spoils. The last event was one of five doubles and Will Scott carried off the honors by getting 10 straight. A return match between Wausau and Grand Rapids will be held in this city on the Fourth of July.

The members are high in their praise of the manner in which they were treated by the Wausau team, both collectively and individually and are anxious to return the compliment.

To Get Rid of Ants.

Wausau Pilot: In response to a letter from Assemblyman W. F. Collius of this city asking how to get rid of ants in lawns, which are very troublesome here this year, E. S. Goff of the state experiment station at Madison makes the following reply:

"The best way I know of to destroy ants in a lawn is to pour a little carbon bi-sulphate into the hill and then cover with a piece of wet cloth to prevent the escape of fumes. I apply it by making a hole an inch or two deep in the center of the ant hill and pouring in about two tablespoonfuls of carbon bi-sulphate. This material can be purchased at the drug store. The fumes of it are heavier than air and so tend to settle into the soil permeating in all directions and destroying all animal life. Care should be taken not to inhale the fumes and no fire should be used in the vicinity as the fumes are explosive. Ant hills on lawns seem to be unusually numerous this season.—E. S. Goff, Experiment Station, Madison, Wisconsin.

It will be argued before Herman Whipperman, as referee. The defendants being represented by Bump, Kreutzer & Rosenberry, of Wausau, and Herman Frank, of Chicago.—Stevens Point Gazette.

PROGRAM COMPLETE

EVENTS ALL FILLED FOR THE 4TH

Promises to be an Entertaining Celebration.—Other Items of Interest About the City.

The entertainment committee for the Fourth of July has about completed the arrangements for the events, and the only thing to hope for is nice weather and there will undoubtedly be one of the biggest celebrations ever seen in this city. The program as outlined for the day is about as follows:

Parade at 10 o'clock a. m. This will form on the west side near the Northwestern depot and march across the river and back. Merchants are requested to turn out, wherever possible, and get into line with some sort of a decorated rig, and be on the ground so as to start promptly at 10 o'clock.

Speech by the Hon. Neal Brown of Wausau at 10:45.

Exhibition drill by Company A. W. N. G., at 11:15.

Wrestling match by the Beell brothers of Marshfield at 11:45.

Gun club shoot between Wausau and Grand Rapids at 1 o'clock p. m. and continuing during afternoon.

1:30 p. m. 75-yard dash, 50-yard dash, 100-yard dash, 75-yard high hurdle, running high jump, running broad jump, shot put.

2:00 o'clock. Tug of war between fire companies, rope climbing.

3:00 o'clock. Ball game. Running horse race, one-half mile bicycle race, one mile bicycle race.

7:00 o'clock. Exhibition drill and band concert, river races, log rolling contest.

7:30 o'clock. High dive.

9:00. Dancing.

Merchants and private parties are requested to do all that is possible to decorate their stores and houses and give the city a gala dress for the occasion. The committee would also like to see private carriages in the parade with floral or other decorations.

Adjudged Insane.—Mrs. Gina Knuteson was examined before Judge Conway on Wednesday to determine the condition of her mind and she was adjudged insane and taken to Oshkosh the same day. The woman had been rational until Sunday last, when she was afflicted with an idea that persons in the back yard were shooting at her and the children, and when her husband came home he found she had the children gathered about her in the house and was afraid to let them go out. There does not seem to be any particular subject along which her mental bias runs, and physicians think that with proper treatment, she will soon be able to return home restored in health. Mr. Knuteson is a section boss on the Green Bay road.

Si Perkins.—Our people have one thing to be thankful for and that is that they do not often have to spend an evening listening to such an aggregation of dead ones as held forth at the opera house on Thursday evening. If the members of the Si Perkins troupe would go home, take up some employment suited to their capabilities, such as sawing wood, or other work not requiring a strictly artistic temperament, they would confer a favor on mankind in general, and probably eventually become respected citizens in the community in which they live.

New Law Firm.—A new law firm has been established in this city during the past week by the association of D. D. Conway and John Jeffrey. To be known under the name of Conway & Jeffrey. Everybody in this section knows Mr. Conway and his ability, and while Mr. Jeffrey is but a recent graduate from Madison university, he is highly spoken of by his classmates as a capable young man, and the Tribune predicts a brilliant future for the new firm.

A Merited Advance.—John Anderson, who has been conductor on the run between this city and Marshfield since the road was built, has been advanced to the position of roadmaster by the Central company. John has been a faithful employee and is well qualified for the position and his many friends will be glad to hear of the recognition of his merit. He assumes his new duties on the first of July.

Bought a Parsonage.—The members of the Congregational society this week purchased the W. H. Falk property on the west side, same to be used as a parsonage. The consideration was $2,100. It was necessary to vacate the property on the east side, owing to it having been sold for residence purposes. The new parsonage is located on Cranberry street, west of the St. Paul depot.

Railway Improvements.—Two crews of men began work on the Wisconsin Central on Monday morning. They will raise the track somewhat and ballast it throughout and put it in as perfect condition as possible. The officials of the company state that when this work is completed the piece of road between Marshfield and Nekoosa will be one of the best on the whole system.

Went to the Circus.—There were about seventy-five tickets sold over the Green Bay & Western on Wednesday to parties who went to Stevens Point to take in the circus. Many who had figured on going were deterred by the rain that morning, so that the number would undoubtedly have aggregated one hundred had the weather been fine.

Sidewalks Needed.—Many of our citizens plod their weary way homeward over bare ground nowadays, owing to the fact that many of the sidewalks have been condemned by the street commissioner and torn up. This action was found necessary on account of the city having to pay damages to persons who have been hurt by defective walks.

A Silver Wedding.—On Thursday Mr. and Mrs. Franz Noworatzky celebrated their silver wedding, that being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. A number of the guests were from out of town, there being about forty in attendance. Mr. and Mrs. Noworatzky received many handsome and useful presents.

Got Forty Days.—Officer A. F. Gerwing came down from Marshfield on Thursday, having in custody Dave McQuaid, who had been sentenced to thirty days in the county jail for stealing a watch from a saloon keeper up there. McQuaid is one of the surfacing crew that works for the Northwestern road at Marshfield.

A Cold June.—People in this section have experienced a succession of cool weather the past month that at times has been anything but agreeable. Parties who were so rash as to remove their heating stoves at the usual time have had ample cause for regret, as a fire is almost a necessity every day.

Touched by Frost.—This section was visited by frosts Saturday and Sunday nights, and although not very severe some of the farmers from surrounding towns report that their corn was injured somewhat, although it is not thought seriously. Cranberry men do not report any damage to their crop.

Popular Excursions.—Every Sunday a number of people take advantage of the excursion rates between this city and Green Bay, about twenty-five going over last Sunday. Besides these a large number are picked up along the road so that when Green Bay is reached the train is pretty well loaded.

Hall-Withers.—Jos. M. Hall and Miss Tena Withers were married in this city on Saturday last, Justice W. H. Gettis officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Hall expect to make their home in this city.

Started a Bank.—The Messrs. Arpin have established a bank at Bruce with a capital of $35,000. A brick building will be erected for the accommodation of the institution. A. L. Arpin will be cashier.

Epworth Leaguers Here.

The first of the delegates to the Epworth League convention to be held in this city arrived in the city Friday morning, and every train has brought additions to the party.

The city has been decorated with red and white bunting and there is every prospect of a most successful convention. There will be almost continuous sessions of the members after the league convenes.

MARRIED BUT NOT MATED

By "RITA"

"Very," said Beryl, with a faint smile. "Rather improbable, though. Who could have opened the spring and shot the priest down the trap door if the secret staircase was unknown?"

"The ghost, of course," said Madge. "Don't you see the sublime justice of the affair? The priest came up the stairs to kill the ghost—by the way, she wasn't a ghost till afterward, but that's a mere detail—the ghost comes up the stairs and kills the priest."

"The corridor is not haunted now, I suppose?" said Beryl.

"Oh, yes. The good prior still takes his 'walks abroad,' in and out of season, and always in that same corridor."

Beryl's lip curled with faint contempt. "Has anyone professed to see it?"

"I do most solemnly assure you, Beryl, that I actually did see it once."

"My dear child!" exclaimed her friend, "don't try and impose on me any further."

"It's not imposing on you," said Madge, gravely. "It was some years ago now. In fact—why should I mind saying it?—it was when you were staying here that Christmas, and—and Ivor Grant. You know what a number of people were here? And one night I was looking at some rooms with the housekeeper that I wanted arranged for some coming guests. I had never heard this ghost story then, and was going along the corridor quite unconcernedly, when I saw before me a tall figure in an odd sort of black robe. I wondered who it was, and called out. At the sound of my voice it turned, and I caught a glimpse of a pale face and glittering eyes under the shrouding cowl. I can't tell you for a moment what a horrible feeling it gave me. I stood quite still. I was so frightened, and then, quite suddenly, it seemed to melt away, and there was nothing."

"Fancy!" said Beryl, laconically.

"Fancy, indeed!" said her friend, with an indignant glance. "It was nothing of the sort; and nothing would induce me to go through that corridor at night—nobody in the world."

"Wouldn't you come with me?" asked Beryl, smiling. "I really feel very much inclined to brave the ghost."

"I hope you won't," said her friend, energetically. "It's all very well to make fun of ghosts and supernatural things, but I'm sure there's something in them for all that."

"Air," remarked Beryl, concisely.

"Skeptic, beware! Perhaps you'll say there's no such thing as magnetism or clairvoyance, or feelings that come by inspiration, like antipathy—instincts that warn us of something to be avoided, and which, if disregarded, invariably lead to harm. Did you never feel such an antipathy?"

"Yes," said Beryl in a low voice, "once."

"And who was it gave you the feeling?"

"Count Savona."

"Ah," said Madge, quietly. "You see my theory is right. You have seen very little of that man, yet you felt he was repugnant to you, and he has worked all the harm of your life. I do wonder what has become of him." She added abruptly, "I would give anything to know."

"We are leaving the field of mysticism," said Beryl. "After all the Count has done as much harm as lies in his power. Why did you bring him up, Madge? It always makes me feel uneasy."

"Well, let us drop the subject," said Madge, rising with a laugh, and pushing back her low chair in order to stand beside her friend. "It is about time for me to dress. You might come down to dinner for once," she added, "and help me entertain the country fogies."

Beryl shook her head.

"Don't ask me to break my rule, dear. Besides, I am much happier here. I can always work best at night."

Madge was silent for a moment. A step sounded outside in the corridor, and she was listening to it, wondering whether Col. Dunbar was coming for her, as he often did. A knock, and then the door opened, and she saw her husband standing there with the post bag in his hand, his usually bright face clouded and troubled.

"Letters?" she said, and stretched out her hands lazily.

He gave them to her in silence. He was looking at Beryl, and she, catching his gaze, felt her heart give a strange, sudden throb.

"You—you have heard something?" she said, hurriedly.

Madge, looking up from her letter at the sound of the sharp, troubled ring in her friend's voice, read, too, that strange expression in her husband's face.

"What is it, Cosmo?" she asked, timidly.

He held an open newspaper in his hand, and at their joint questioning he pointed to a paragraph contained in it.

"Shipping List," murmured Madge, vaguely, as she left the room. "What of that?"

But Beryl Marsden's face grew like stone. She saw plainly enough what was printed there. Only a list of passengers homeward bound in the mail steamer from Madras, and midway in that list was her husband's name, "John Marsden."

How distinctly she remembered when last they parted! How, in frenzy, and terror, and wild grief, she had accused him of being the cause of her children's danger, and scarcely paused to say farewell, in the agony of mind caused by Ivor Grant's message.

The fall of the wood-ash, the tick of the clock, were the only audible sounds, and she rose from her chair at last with a faint, nervous shiver, and stirred the logs into a brighter blaze.

"I can do no more work to-night," she thought to herself, as she put the scattered sheets together, and wheeled the table away into its recess. Then she opened the door, and went out into the dimly lighted passage.

The little study set apart for her use was far removed from the reception and morning rooms. As she moved slowly along, her eyes turned half-unconsciously to the staircase leading to that dissuaded suite of rooms opening on the north corridor. Her thoughts were far enough away from any memory of Madge Dunbar's story. Yet suddenly a deathly chill seemed to fall over her, as if some numbing blast had swept across her face.

Involuntarily she paused, and her eyes caught sight of a figure moving swiftly along in the dim glow of the unlighted corridor. Half in wonder her glance followed it. A tall figure in dusky, swaying garments, and drawn over its head a monk's cowl. Then swift as thought came the memory of Mrs. Dunbar's story, and Beryl caught her breath in a sudden spasm of fear. An instant, and she sprang up the staircase, her light feet echoing on the polished oak. The figure turned. At the same moment her foot slipped on the polished oak surface, and she fell backwards, clutching at the balustrade to save or break her fall.

Bruised and shaken, she rose at last, and again, as if in mockery, the flickering moonlight showed her the long, dusky corridor stretching before her. It was empty. Not a sight or sign of living creature as the moon rays swept it from end to end.

Dazed and shaken, she groped her way back and found herself at last in her own room. The reflection of her face startled her as she met it in the glass. Involuntarily she pressed her hands to her eyes as if to shut out their fixed look of horror.

"What have I seen?" she asked herself, and only the wild throbs of her heart answered the question. She sank into a chair before the fire, and there remained lost in deep and confused thought.

The sound of Madge Dunbar's laughing voice struck on her ear at last like a jarring discord. The presence of the pretty little woman fluttering into the room in her Parisian toilette and glittering jewels seemed to her incongruous and irritating.

"Is anything the matter?" she asked, abruptly. "Mercy! you look as if you had seen a ghost."

"I—think I have," said Beryl Marsden.

CHAPTER XVII.

Among the passengers who landed at Gravesend from the Orient was a short, commonplace-looking man, with a shrunken yellow face and a pompous manner. He went to the best hotel, and gave automatic orders, and generally comported himself as one accustomed to rule and dictate.

Obedient waiters bowed before him, and conducted him to a private sitting room already ordered, requested his instructions as to dinner, and presented offerings in the shape of newspapers and magazines to while away the time until that meal should be ready.

"I am expecting a visitor," said the pompous individual. "You will show him here directly he arrives."

His solitude was not of long continuance. A knock at the door was speedily followed by the appearance of his expected visitor. For an instant the two men surveyed each other critically, as if taking mental notes of each other's capabilities.

Then the occupant of the chair nodded carelessly, and remarked:

"Count Savona, I presume?"

"At your service, sir," said the stranger, with a polite bow that seemed to convey a rebuke against the boorishness of his reception.

"Take a chair," said the Englishman. "I'm John Marsden, as, no doubt, you guess. Now, may I ask why you're thought proper to drag me over all these thousands of miles of sea and land? It nearly cost me my life. I assure you. Tiger-cats may be very pretty things to look at and play with, but they're the mischief with their claws."

"So I presume," said the Count with a queer smile. "I am a wise man, Mr. Marsden, and leave such playthings to those who like scratches better than punning. However, since you are here, let us to business. You may be very sure I have not asked you to come to England for nothing. What would you say if I informed you that there was a nice little property with a comfortable rent-roll at your disposal—dependent only on a very simple condition?"

The sailor face flushed suddenly.

"What do you mean?" asked John Marsden.

"Just what I say. The property comes to your wife. I have taken the trouble to trace it out—no small trouble or difficulty, I assure you. It is fortunate that you did not come to open warfare, because you have an opportunity now for being magnanimous. She knows nothing yet. You have only to throw yourself at her feet, or let her throw herself at yours, to forget and forgive the past, and step into the position of an English land owner."

"I—I can't believe it."

The Count shrugged his shoulders.

"Odd that people always find it harder to believe good fortune than bad. It's quite true, I assure you. I advised you to come home because it is better policy to make up your quarrel with your wife before she learns that she is an heiress. It looks disinterested now. A month hence it won't."

"But—but," stammered John Marsden foolishly. "I don't think she will make it up. I've insulted her, quarreled with her—I've never sent her a penny since you told me about her going on with that fellow Grant, and now how the deuce can I go to her and expect her to be friends? She'll never come back."

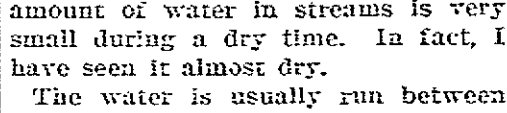

"Ah," said the Count, with his chill smile, "there steps in the beauty of your English law. Madame the wife may quarrel as she pleases with monsieur the husband, but when monsieur the husband desires that she shall live under his roof madame cannot help herself, unless—well, your wife is not a woman to avail herself of that outlet, or she would have done it before now. Do you know how she has supported herself these three years?"

FARMS AND FARMERS

Irrigating a Farm Garden.

Many farmers feel so sure of success with artificial watering that they are putting down artesian wells and intend to build reservoirs as soon as possible, the past dry seasons causing them to realize the necessity of a most constant supply of moisture. Nearly all the wells are 2 inches in diameter and cost from 50 to 50 cents per foot. The flow amounts to from 15 to 25 gallons per minute. One 3½-inch well that cost $200 and is 295 feet deep flows about 1,300 gallons per minute, though the amount has never been accurately measured. It is thought the flow of some wells near this large one has diminished and it is possible that the artesian water supply may be limited.

A few fields have been flooded or "wet up" direct from these wells during the fall and winter, and have produced the following season 25 to 30 bushels of wheat to the acre, and other crops in proportion, while fields not so treated produced less than half this amount. Irrigation here is largely confined to gardens, the water in most cases being used direct from the wells, but a few farmers have reservoirs which aid in the economical use of the water, thus giving much better results. One garden has been irrigated five years and is producing all kinds of vegetables in abundance and of fine quality. A few gardens have been watered by wind-pumps. This method gives excellent results, especially where a small reservoir is used. Other gardens have been watered by pumping from streams. This mode of irrigation must necessarily be limited, as the amount of water in streams is very small during a dry time. In fact, I have seen it almost dry.

The water is usually run between the rows of the various crops, sometimes between every row, or at most every third or fourth row. The plan proposed is to have main ditches, with several sets of laterals dividing the fields into squares, varying in size according to the slope of the land. Instead of ditches for the second set of laterals, back furrows may have to be substituted if the fields have much slope, for the water is too valuable to permit of waste. The illustration shows how a few "catch" the water from artesian wells. It may be distributed as best suits the gardener or farmer.—L. G. Hendricks, in Farm and Home.

The Gradus Pea.

Those who find the best profit in raising the wrinkled varieties of peas will be glad to have the Gradus, shown in the illustration. Not only is the quality of this variety equal to that of any wrinkled sort, but it is better than any of the smooth sorts that are early in season. The Gradus combines quality with extra earliness and extreme productiveness. Most of the wrinkled sorts are rather tender, but this variety may be planted as early as any of the smooth sorts without injury, and is said to be the only wrinkled variety with which this can be done. The growth of the vine is strong and healthy, and the bearing qualities are of the best. The pods are large, holding from eight to ten peas. While the sort is comparatively new, it has been tested quite extensively, and if it does as well generally as in the localities where it has been tested it will be an acquisition.

Deep Plowing.

We used to believe in what we read when young about the value of plowing deep to bring up the fertility that had leached down through the surface soil into the subsoil. Our opinion was changed when we tested the deep plowing upon a field with a clay subsoil that we planted with corn. Later experiments have more thoroughly convinced us that deep plowing, by which we mean a depth of more than four to six inches, is seldom beneficial in this climate, whatever it may be in other sections of the country. The crops like

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Peeling Apples.

In peeling apples it is disagreeable to see a sort of brown rust creeping over the white pulp if the slices have to stand very long. This brown coloring is a pigment of the actual nature of rust, caused by the presence of iron in the fruit and the oxidation of that iron by the air. The acid in the pulp helps in this oxidation considerably. By setting each quarter or slice as it is peeled in a basin of cold water no air contact is possible and the browning is avoided. But the water draws out the acids and there is a sacrifice of flavor to color if this plan is used and the apples soaked too long. Any discolored slices will turn white again if rubbed with a piece of lemon.

To Mend a Lamp Collar.

Mend a lamp loose in the collar with sifted plaster of paris mixed to a very soft paste with beaten white of an egg. Have everything ready before wetting up the plaster and work quickly, so it may set in place. With several lamps to mend, wet enough plaster for one at a time. It takes less than five minutes to set and is utterly worthless if one tries working it over. Metal work apart from the glass needs the soldering iron. Dust the glass well with powdered resin, tie the parts firmly together, lay the stock of solder above the break and fetch the iron down on it lightly but firmly. When the solder cools remove the melted resin with a cloth dipped in alcohol.

Cabinet Pudding.

Beat two eggs, add a pint and a half of milk to them, grease a pudding mold, sprinkle the bottom with raisins or chopped citron, then put in a layer of cake and a sprinkle of fruit, and continue with cake and fruit until one quart of crumbs are used; add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and a pinch of salt to the eggs. Pour the liquid over the crumbs, and put the cover on the mold. Let stand fifteen minutes, then place the mold in a pan of boiling water, and boil for one hour; turn out, and serve with lemon sauce.

Curry of Chicken and Rice.

Make a white sauce as follows: Melt one tablespoonful of butter without browning; add one tablespoonful of flour and stir until smooth; add one cup of milk and stir continually until it thickens; add one teaspoonful of curry powder, one-half of a cup of boiled rice, one-half of a cup of cold chopped chicken. When heated serve.—Table Talk.

Potato Cakes.

Take cold mashed potatoes, moisten with a little cream, and work in sufficient flour, in which baking powder is mixed, to make a firm dough, adding a pinch of salt. Roll out the potato paste, thinly sprinkle with dry flour or a beaten egg, cut into rounds, and bake on a hot griddle for ten minutes; butter while hot, and serve.

Beef Hash.

Chop rather fine cold roast beef and twice the amount of cold boiled potatoes. Put a piece of butter into a frying pan, and when melted put in the meat and potatoes. Add enough beef gravy or stock to moisten; stir occasionally; let it brown on the bottom of the pan, and then turn out like an omelet on a hot platter.

Granulated Eyelids.

An alum paste made by rubbing a small piece of alum into the white of an egg until a curd is formed. Apply to the eyelids upon retiring at night; trying a piece of soft linen over the eyes will often entirely cure the trouble.

Brief Hints.

Never mix a French dressing until ready to use. The vinegar and oil will separate.

Add an acid touch of lemon juice to all fish sauces except those in which there is milk.

A tablespoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid in the whitening process.

To clean sponges soak well in milk for several hours and then rinse a few times in clear water.

In using a gas stove the oven will at times become very hot. To cool quickly place a dish of cold water in it.

When beating eggs a small pinch of salt added to the white will cause them to beat a stiff froth more readily.

Boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm or a little salt, or a little gum arabic dissolved.

Cut flowers may be revived when wilted by placing the stems in boiling water and allowing them to stand until the water cools.

Always keep olive oil in the refrigerator and see that it is tightly corked. Never put more oil in the table cruet than two days' supply. It will grow rancid.

If copper or brass is very dirty put some fine salt on a board, dip into it a cut lemon or vinegar and rub on the metal. This strong acid will remove the worst stain.

Republican Caucuses.

The republican caucuses for the election of delegates to the convention at Nekeosa, where delegates to the state convention will be named, occur on Saturday evening. There may be some fun at these caucuses, if the opposing factions are evenly enough divided to make it anywhere near an even thing.

The La Follette followers expect a comparatively easy victory in this city, and in fact through the entire county, but of course you can't always tell until the returns are in. The authorities at the state capital expect a solid delegation from Wood county for the administration.

It is stated that democrats have been asked to attend these caucuses, but they should not do, as voting at a republican caucus will preclude their voting at a democratic caucus. The democrats will have up a ticket this fall, in both county and state, that will be worthy of the vote of any honest man, and democrats should expend their energies in electing this ticket, and if they do so there will be no question of which way the election will go.

Tell a man he has slept 20 years and he'll give you a pitying stare but it's a fact just the same. The man who has reached the age of 60 years has spent one-third of his life, or twenty years, in slumber and if a man is lucky enough to live until he is 75 he has Rip Van Winkle beaten to a standstill. The average person sleeps 8 hours a day or exactly one-third of his day's life. Again, if you abruptly inform a man of 60 that he has stowed a herd of cattle under his belt in his time he will put you down as a third year man in an insane asylum. Figures, however, don't lie and you can give him a statistical knock-out. A healthy man eats on an average one pound of meat every day of his life and in 60 years he will devour 21,900 pounds. Allowing 1000 pounds as an average weight of a beef, you have 22 cattle, a respectable herd.—Ex.

DURING a talk with a prominent republican from the north end of the county this week, that gentleman stated that it was his private opinion that there was no possible show for the republicans to win out in either the state or county this year, provided, of course, that the democrats put up men for the different offices whom the people have confidence in. This should not be a hard matter to do, as the years of failure have gradually weeded out the politicians who make the seeking of office a business, and left only men who are democrats because they believe in the principles of democracy.

He knows that this paper aims to advertise only the best in its columns, and when he saw Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised therein for lame back, he did not hesitate in buying a bottle of it for his wife, who for eight weeks had suffered with the most terrible pains in her back and could get no relief. He says: "After using the Pain Balm for a few days my wife said to me, 'I feel as though born anew,' and before using the entire contents of the bottle the unbearable pains had entirely vanished and she could again take up her household duties." STORY OF SUGAR.

Graphic Description of the Methods of Reducing Sugar Cane and Beet Root to the Sugar of Commerce---A Bit of History and a Mass of Uncommon and Interesting News Given.

SUGAR is a generic term, having one meaning in chemistry, another in commerce and still another in politics. In the slang phraseology of the day, sugar has supplanted "soap" as the agent which keeps political machines greased and accomplishes many things which the uninitiated public fails to understand.

The sugar of commerce, however, while it has been suspected of mixing in politics, has a more important office than that of a lubricant of the wheels of government. If it sweetens the cup for some of our statesmen it also fills the cup for thousands of toilers, gives scores of thousands of little folks the stomach ache and, in one form or another, makes America the paradise of dentists. America does not make a very large proportion of the world's supply of raw saccharine matter, but it refines a great deal of it, importing for the purpose something like 2,700,000,000 pounds annually. While the United States produces only about 600,000,000 pounds of cane sugar annually, it refines many times that amount, an indication that this country not only has a very big sweet tooth but has a of size takes place. The ordinary practice on sugar estates is to renew a part of the plantation every year.

Sugar refining, to which passing reference has been made, has become a gigantic industry, and the process has been improved so much by the introduction of machinery that whereas formerly only the very wealthy could afford to use refined sugar, now it is one of the commonest necessities of life. Even so late as the last half of the last century, sugar was by no means in general use, its cost being prohibitive excepting among the rich.

The process of refining sugar is substantially the same in all countries, although it has been brought to greater perfection in America than elsewhere. The preparation of raw sugar is interesting. The extraction of the juice from the cane is effected by simple pressure. The mills in use are powerful machines. Some idea of the strength of these mills will be formed from the fact that one of the rollers weighs upward of five tons. The axes are 12 inches in diameter. The canes, freed from all loose leaves, are passed through between the rollers under the

into a pump sawdust and bone black into the filter to gather the foreign matter, and then strain the fluid through jute and cotton. After reheating the liquor is run through filters of charred bone. These filters are iron cylinders about six feet in diameter and thirty feet high ordinarily, but in the mammoth Havemeyer refinery in Brooklyn is a char-filter containing thirty tons of bone charcoal. The dark liquor percolates slowly through the coarse powder. The result is that it flows out at the bottom a perfectly twelve stories high, and the raw sugar is first hoisted to the upper story, where it is dissolved in large tanks of hot water, care being taken to use as little water for the purpose as possible. Formerly a quantity of bullock's blood was stirred into the solution of transparent and pure solution of sugar. The charcoal can only be used for a few days at a time, because it gradually loses its purifying power, but it is taken out and reburned and then is as good as ever.

The liquor as it flows from the charcoal filter is a mixture of pure sugar and pure water. The application of heat is the only mode of expelling the water, and this unfortunately blackens the sugar again. After being heated in vacuum pans, the sugar is run into sugar-loaf forms which, after cooling, are carried to a room warmed by steam pipes. This warmth facilitates the flow of the treacle or syrup to the aperture at the bottom of the form. To get rid of the coating of colored syrup which still hangs about the crystals of sugar, a small quantity of a saturated solution of pure white sugar is poured on the top of the form. This strong liquid is unable to dissolve any more sugar, but being more fluid than the sticky coating of syrup adhering to the crystals, it mixes with the coatings and makes them fluid enough to flow down to the bottom of the form, leaving the crystals clear of syrup and coloring.

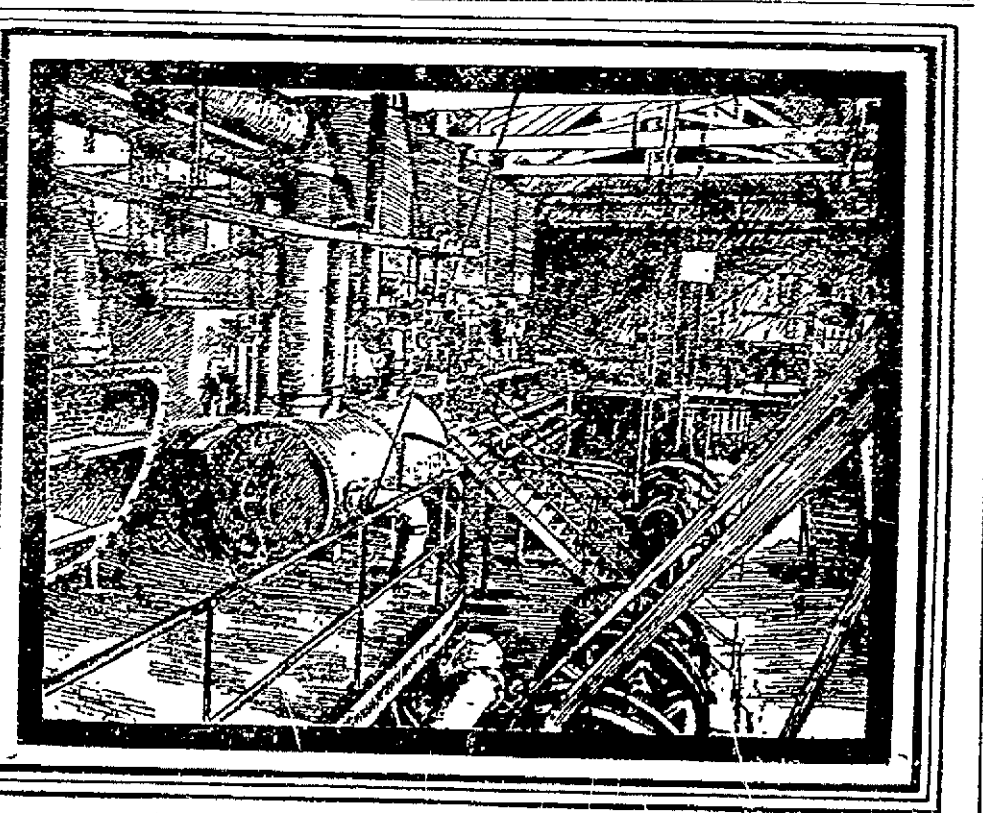

The liquor draining from the forms is reboiled and forms loaves of inferior grade, and the liquor drained from the inferior loaves is again boiled into yellow sugars.

Crushed sugar is simply inferior loaves crushed while soft and moist. The syrup which drains from refined sugar is reboiled and constitutes the "golden drip" syrup sold in the stores.

Beet Sugar Process.

The process with beet sugar, which is of inferior sweetening quality, is quite similar to that pursued with cane sugar, except that the juice is treated with lime or sulphuric acid to clarify it, is strained through flannel, and the filtered juice is mixed with lime-water beat up with the white of egg. Beet root gives about 10 per cent of saccharine matter as compared with the 18 per cent of cane sugar. The mangold-wurzel beet is best for sugar making. These dry details give an idea of sugar refining. The production of sugar, the various stages of its development from cane to marketable product, and the commerce in sugar constitute a prodigious industry. The beet sugar production of the world amounts to 3,900,000 tons annually, while the production of cane sugar reaches an annual total of 2,900,000 tons. A fair proportion of the world's output of raw cane sugar comes from America, not to exceed 265,000 tons, the cane sugar growing being confined to the States of Louisiana, Texas, Florida and Mississippi, the first named State producing all but 6,000 tons of it. The greatest cane sugar country in the world is Cuba, with $30,000 tons annually.

INTERIOR OF A SUGAR REFINERY.

WILD BEASTS IN A POCKET.

Corralled by Ranchmen in Arizona and Ruthlessly Slaughtered.

For several months past the mountain lions, bears and wolves that abound in some parts of Arizona have been playing sad havoc with the stock on the ranch of Colin Campbell in Co-chise county. With 10,000 cattle on the range, the heavy losses in calves and yearlings by the ravages of the wild animals have cut down the dividends of the stock company which owns the range.

"Charley" Montgomery, famous all over Arizona as a hunter and who was chief of scouts under General Crook during the trouble with the Apaches, was engaged to exterminate the animals which have been raiding the herds. Montgomery engaged 100 men of the Pima tribe and held a big round up of the "varmints."

Early in the morning his Indians and a score of cowboys surrounded a district five miles square in the foothills of the Chiricabua range and gradually closed in toward the center, with 200 dogs in the rodeo. As they reached the center of the circle catamounts, black bears, coyotes and an occasional grizzly bear tried to break through the line, but were met by a shower of bullets. Dozens of animals perished in the attempt to escape, but 200 others were finally cornered in a box canyon, while redskins and cowpunchers picked them off from the rocks above.

There were scores of close conflicts with the enraged and frightened brutes, and in one melee four Indians were fearfully mangled by a grizzly before their shots finally finished the bear. One of the reds, Antonio Herma, a former chief of the tribe, received fatal wounds from the claws of a big fellow. The dogs closed in on the victims and dozens of them were killed before the slaughter was complete. The final count showed nineteen dead mountain lions, five grizzlies, two lynxes and ever 100 coyotes—doubtless the biggest round-up of wild animals that has ever occurred in Arizona.

THE HOLY CITY.

Jerusalem Still Rembles a Great Fortress of the Middle Ages.

Jerusalem is literally "built upon its own heap." Below the houses, courts and paved streets of the present unkempt city are the distinguishable remains of eight older cities—those of Solomon, Nebuchadnezzar, Herod, Hadrian, Constantine, Omar, Godfrey, Saladin, Suleiman, writes Walker Williams from the "Holy City" to his paper in Columbia, Mo. Jerusalem has been besieged twenty-seven times, a record of vicissitude unparalleled in the history of the world's cities. It has been burned, sacked, razed to the ground, its inhabitants of every faith put to the sword, all the woes uttered by its own prophets against it have come to pass, yet Jerusalem still resembles a great fortress of the middle ages. Seen from the Mount of Olives, its massive gray walls, its flat-roofed houses, its mosques and churches with their conspicuous towers and minarets, present a marvelous picture, beautiful, sublime, unending, from the picture gallery of the mind. The city itself has narrow, dirty streets—the water supply for its 70,000 people comes in a four-inch pipe—the open courts are few and small, the houses are bunched together with no regard for room or cleanliness. Some houses are underground and others on top of the high inclosing walls. The people are fanatical, ignorant, selfish. There is much to detract from the ideal city, but despite all this and more Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives is the same in its essential details, the same in the framework of its setting, the same in fascinating suggestion, as the Jerusalem of which David sang, and over which Jesus wept.

Crabs that Hunt Rabbits.

Catching rabbits with a crab is a favorite pastime of the country boys in the lands lying on the English coast. One would think a mouse trap and a bit of cheese would be a safer method, but it isn't. The way they work it is this:

A large, lively crab is caught on the shore and pressed into service. From a lighted candle hot grease is dropped on the back of the crustacean and the candle stuck upright in this way on the shell. As soon as the grease holding the candle has hardened firmly the crab is placed in one end of a rabbit burrow, at the other end of which there is a net. The rabbits, seeing the strange looking creature coming toward them sideways with a lighted candle on its back become terrified and bolt out to be caught in the net of the hunters. In due time the crab also emerges and is caught and placed in the mouth of another burrow to scare out other rabbits. This continues until the boys have bagged all the rabbits they want. If the crab proves himself lively and works hard in their behalf the hunters generally restore him to the sea after the night's sport is over.

Mental Variations.

If there is anything certain, it is that no intelligent person will retain all the same views at 30 that he held at 20, or retain those at 50 that he held at 30. Nor are these mental variations to be deplored. Emerson says, "Why should you keep your head over your shoulder, lest you contradict somewhat you have stated in this or that public place? Suppose you should contradict yourself—what then? It seems to be a rule of wisdom never to rely on your memory alone, but bring the past for judgment into the thousand-eyed present, and live ever in a new day."

SCENES IN THE SUGAR CANE DISTRICT.

refining influence upon one of the world's great products.

The sugar of commerce is obtained from the juice of the sugar cane, a genus of the grasses, which is found chiefly in tropical and sub-tropical regions, and is also obtained from a species of the beet root which is cultivated for the purpose extensively abroad, and of late years to a considerable and constantly increasing extent in some portions of the United States. As a matter of fact, the world's annual production of beet sugar is much larger than the production of cane sugar. Cane sugar is the kind in common use, or at least is supposed to be, and as cane sugar is entitled to precedence on account of age, it should first receive attention.

Limited Area of Sugar Growing.

Sugar cane is not cosmopolitan. It is rarely found at all, and never in profitable condition, north of latitude 32 degrees north, or south of latitude 22 degrees south. The cane-producing countries are Cuba, Java, the United States, the Philippine Islands, Brazil, the Hawaiian Islands, Mauritius, Demarara, Egypt, Barbadoes, Peru, Porto Rico, Trinidad, Guadeloupe, Reunion, Martinique, Jamaica and the Lesser Antilles.

During slave days in the West Indies and in the Southern States of America, hand hoeing was universal, but the plow is now very generally used when the nature of the ground permits. The best varieties are ready for cutting in about ten months from the time of planting, but other varieties require from twelve to twenty months to develop. When the canes are fully ripe they are cut a little above the ground, and tied in bundles to be conveyed to the mill. Fresh canes spring from the root, so that the plantation does not require to be renewed for several years; but the canes of the first crop are the largest, and a gradual decrease greatest pressure that can be brought to bear upon them. The rollers revolve only from two to four times per minute. From 100 pounds of cane, 65 or 75 pounds of cane juice will be expressed. The juice, which is of a sweetish taste, and of the color of dirty water, passes direct from the mill to a reservoir, where it usually receives a small dose of quicklime, and without delay runs off to large iron or copper vessels, heated either by a fire underneath or by steam pipes in the liquid. The scum rising to the top is skimmed off or the liquid is drawn off at the bottom. The concentration of the juice is partly effected in a series of large, hemispherical iron pans set in a row with a large fire under the one at the end. This one fire, which runs along under the rows of pans, is sufficient to heat the juice in the distant pans and to increase the heat as the pans near the source of heat, until the first two or three boil and the first one seethes and foams violently. The juice is gradually drawn from one pan to another until it reaches the pan in which the greatest degree of heat is found. After the concentration has been carried to a given point and all the scum has been got rid of, the application of high heat is suspended, and the liquor, now of the color of port wine, and of the consistency of oil, is drawn into a vacuum pan, where the concentration is completed at the lowest possible temperature.

The vacuum pan is made of copper of a spherical form. The bottom is double, leaving a space of an inch or two for the admission of steam between the two bottoms, and there is generally a long coil of copper pipe of three or four inches diameter above the inner bottom, so as to still further increase the amount of heating surface. This apparatus is made perfectly air and steam tight. Leading from the upper dome there is a large pipe

RUDOLPH.

It is reported that a tramp visited the home of John Coulthart on Wednesday while all the family was away except Ray, an eleven year old boy, and attempted to get away with something of value, but failed. The story is that the tramp entered the house and after he had questioned the boy and discovered that the family was absent, the boy picked up a Winchester rifle and advised him to move on. The gun was not loaded, and while the boy was trying to get a shell into the weapon the tramp grabbed the gun and got it away from the boy. Ray then backed into an adjoining room and locked the door, and remained there until the tramp left. It could not be discovered that the tramp had taken anything.
